INTRODUCTION.

This fourth annual issue of the Handbook reveals more clearly than its predecessors the utter lack of adequate protection for working children in the United States. Not merely does the recurring black list of states and territories in the schedules show what remains to be done in those states, it indicates that the United States of America, as a nation, fails to rank with the enlightened countries of Europe—with England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland and Scandinavia—when classed according to its care of its working children. Indeed, it is with Russia rather than with these nations that the United States compares, for Russia also permits little children to work all night.

The enlightened nations of Europe enact one law for the whole nation, leaving to the local authorities only the duty of enforcement. The Congress of the United States enacts protective measures, for instance, for the benefit of the cotton and glass industries, but leaves the protection of the children in those industries to the various legislatures, with the result that many thousand little boys in many states are left free to labor all night in the glass works, while both little girls and little boys work all night, regularly in the cotton mills of the Southern states.

The federal government does not even afford up-to-date information concerning the children, as is proved by the publication of this Handbook, year after year, by a volunteer organization. Far more appropriately might the Handbook have appeared for twelve years past, as a January bulletin of the Department of Labor or of the Department of Education, or of both in co-operation.

An important step forward will be taken when Congress adopts the proposed bill for a Children's Bureau, a bureau for research and publicity, dealing with all those (still) questions which affect the life, health, welfare and efficiency of the children of the nation. The substance of the bill is given on page 50.

A second bill now pending before Congress provides for the working children in the District of Columbia. It is given in full in order that every reader of the Handbook may urge upon his or her senator and representative the necessity of voting for it, that the nation's capital may be removed from the black list and may become an example to the rest of the country. See page 51.

The effort to obtain and enforce uniform legislation upon the basis of the best yet attained continues in ever-widening areas and among increasingly powerful bodies of citizens. The effort for a Children's Bureau in the federal government is due to the National Child Labor Committee. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, at its biennial meeting, at St. Louis, in May, 1907, adopted a resolution urging state federations and individual clubs "to concentrate upon the passage of laws covering these points: (1) That children under the age of sixteen years should not work between the hours of 7 P.M. and 7 A.M. (2) That children should not work who cannot read and write in the English language. (3) In states in which these two points are already covered by effective laws, the adoption of the standard child labor law is recommended, including the newsboys' law."

At the inter-biennial meeting of the Council of the Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Atlantic City, in June, 1905, a resolution was unanimously adopted approving the principle that work after 7 P. M. should be prohibited for all girls under the age of 18 years employed in manufacture and commerce.

INTRODUCTION.

This fourth annual issue of the Handbook reveals more clearly than its predecessors the utter lack of adequate protection for working children in the United States. Not merely does the recurring black list of states and territories in the schedules show what remains to be done in those states, it indicates that the United States of America, as a nation, fails to rank with the enlightened countries of Europe—with England, France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland and Scandinavia—when classed according to its care of its working children. Indeed, it is with Russia rather than with these nations that the United States compares, for Russia also permits little children to work all night.

The enlightened nations of Europe enact one law for the whole nation, leaving to the local authorities only the duty of enforcement. The Congress of the United States enacts protective measures, for instance, for the benefit of the cotton and glass industries, but leaves the protection of the children in those industries to the various legislatures, with the result that many thousand little boys, in many states, are left free to labor all night in the glass works, while both little girls and little boys work all night, regularly in the cotton mills of the Southern states.

The federal government does not even afford up-to-date information concerning the children, as is proved by the publication of this Handbook, year after year, by a volunteer organization. Far more appropriately might the Handbook have appeared for twenty years past, as a January bulletin of the Department of Labor or of the Department of Education, or of both in co-operation.

An important step forward will be taken, when Congress adopts the proposed bill for a Children's Bureau, a bureau for research and publicity, dealing with all those conditions which affect the life, health, welfare and efficiency of the children of the nation. The substance of the bill is given on page 50.

A second bill now pending before Congress provides for the working children in the District of Columbia. It is given in full in order that every reader of the Handbook may urge upon his or her senator and representative the necessity of voting for it, that the nation's capital may be removed from the black list and may become an example to the rest of the country. See page 51.

The effort to obtain and enforce uniform legislation upon the basis of the best yet attained continues in ever-widening areas and among increasingly powerful bodies of citizens. The effort for a Children's Bureau in the federal government is due to the National Child Labor Committee. The General Federation of Women's Clubs, at its biennial meeting, at St. Louis, in May, 1902, adopted a resolution urging state federations and individual clubs "to concentrate upon the passage of laws covering these points: (1) That children under the age of sixteen years should not work between the hours of 7 P.M. and 7 A.M. (2) That children should not work who cannot read and write in the English language. (3) In states in which these two points are already covered by effective laws, the adoption of the standard child labor law is recommended, including the newsboys' law."

At the inter-biennial meeting of the Council of the Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Atlantic City, in June, 1905, a resolution was unanimously adopted approving the principle that work after 7 P. M. should be prohibited for all girls under the age of 18 years employed in manufacture and commerce.

This recommendation had been adopted by the National Consumers' League at the meeting of its Executive Committee, in May, 1905, and will be submitted for approval to all appropriate national bodies of men and women. The enactment of laws embodying this early closing principle applied to girls under 18 years of age will, of course, incidentally protect girls under 16 years.

Attention is called to two wrong principles which should be avoided in framing new laws and amending old ones. First, attendance at an evening school by working children under the age of 16 years should never be prescribed or tolerated. This cruel and futile requirement was, during 1905, abolished in Massachusetts and replaced by the requirement that all children under 16 years of age must be able to read and write in the English language before beginning to work. Unfortunately, the night school requirement, abolished in one state, was enacted in two others. Second, certain states have recently placed the issuance of "working-papers" in the hands of the factory inspectors. It is, however, the duty of inspectors to inspect, and to prosecute violations of the law. Everything which calls them away from the continuous performance of these two duties is an injury to the service. The appropriate officials for issuing "working-papers" are the local boards of health, in co-operation with the local boards of education. In this respect, the law of New York excels the laws of all the other states in proved efficiency, and may well be adopted as the standard. Notaries public and factory inspectors should be, in all cases, debarred from issuing "working-papers," and factory inspectors should be kept strictly to the tasks of inspection and prosecution. How far the present usage differs from this standard may be seen by reference to the records of prosecutions in schedule Hb, and to the list of authorities issuing "working-papers" in schedule E.

Certain industries have hitherto obtained exemptions for which there is no tenable basis. Thus, in Pennsylvania the glass industry has retained the privilege of employing boys of fourteen years all night, while other employers are restricted to nine o'clock.

In Delaware and Maryland canneries are specifically exempted from the provisions of the law as to age and hours of labor. This is particularly injurious for the children, because the busy season in this industry falls in the months of excessive heat, rendering work peculiarly exhausting.

California exempts all agricultural, horticultural, viticultural or domestic labor during the time the public schools are not in session, or during other than school hours. This makes it possible to require children to do an unlimited day's work in addition to going to school, irrespective of their age.

In every state in which domestic labor is exempted, a premium is placed upon work at home, and the sweating-system is fostered.

SCHEDULE A—AGE LIMIT

The Age Below Which Child Labor Is Prohibited varies from sixteen to ten years. The number of employments prohibited also varies greatly—from all employment during school hours to mine work only. Stores, factories and mines are the places of employment usually specified, and several states include also laundries, telegraph and telephone offices, and other lines of work regarded as dangerous for children, including street trades. Obviously the states which prohibit child labor in several occupations have more effective legislation than those which prohibit it in only one or two, even though the age limit be the same.

California, Delaware, Maryland have laws protecting certain classes of children, but permit exemptions of an unusually wholesale character—explicitly leaving the children unprotected in canneries, an industry in which the hours of labor inevitably tend to become irregular and exhaustingly long.

The pressure of competition of the cotton mills of Georgia and South Carolina upon mills in northern states is frequently urged as a reason for deferring much needed legislation in such states, until Georgia takes the initial step in the direction of restricting child labor, and South Carolina increases her requirements. The prominence of the District of Columbia as containing the capital of the nation, and the fact that many children are employed there as messengers and in the street trades, make it particularly desirable that the District should speedily be removed from the list of states, which have no age limit in the employment of children.

SCHEDULE B—HOURS OF LABOR

Work at Night Is Specifically Prohibited In Only 20 States. One state, Alabama, specifically authorizes night work for children between thirteen and sixteen years of age by restricting such night work to forty-eight hours in the week.

Thirty-two states fail to prohibit work at night and vary widely in their usage. For instance, Connecticut enforces her restriction as to hours of labor by day, and usage prevents the employment of children at night in factories and stores. In New Jersey, however, usage permits the employment of children at night, in various industries, as soon as they are allowed to work. Children have no positive immunity from night work, unless the hours are explicitly stated between which it is unlawful to employ them.

Those states which fail to restrict the hours of labor allowed in one week as well as in one day invite the possibility of seven days' labor. In Washington, for example, women and girls may not only work ten hours at night, they may do this every night, including Sunday.

The District of Columbia and 18 states and territories have no time limit whatsoever.

California, Delaware and Maryland exempt large numbers of children from any restriction of hours in canneries and fruit preserving establishments.

SCHEDULE C—COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

In Respect to Compulsory Attendance Laws the points to be noted are:

1. The age to which attendance is required (which varies from sixteen to twelve years).

2. The length of the annual period of attendance (which varies from the whole school year to eight weeks).

The most effective means of preventing the illegal employment of children is compulsory school attendance throughout the entire period during which employment is prohibited. Twenty-three states now have this requirement. If the law prohibits children from working under a certain age, it should require them to be in school to that age, during the entire school term of each year. In states where children under the legal age of employment are not obliged to be in school all the year, complications in the enforcement of the child labor law invariably arise, because it is easy for parents to send their children to work under the legal age.

Exemptions from the compulsory education laws are granted in many states for one or more of the following reasons:

Physical or mental disability.
Private instruction.
Distance from school (over two to three miles).
Poverty.

In a few states free clothing or other aids are granted on account of poverty.

SCHEDULE D—EDUCATIONAL REQUIREMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT

(Children under the ages specified may not be employed unless they meet the requirements indicated.)

An Educational Requirement before children can be legally employed is found in states having the most advanced child-labor legislation. This requirement consists of the completion of a specified curriculum, ability to read and write, (English not always specified) and a certain amount of school attendance.

Three states, New York, Oregon and Pennsylvania, require to a certain age, proof of the completion of a specified curriculum before employment. This requirement is particularly valuable in securing immunity from labor and the privilege of school attendance for illiterate immigrant children. In New York and Oregon children of 14 years may not work, even though able to furnish proof of age, unless they have had a fixed minimum of education, as proved by their signed school record. In New York the amount of schooling required is that obtained by the normal child by the end of its twelfth year, if regular in attendance and promotion. In Pennsylvania, signed proof of the completion of the curriculum is required only of children unable to furnish documentary proof of age.

Three other states, Ohio, Montana and Washington, also require completion of a curriculum before employment, but fail to require definite signed proof of compliance with the requirement.

Twelve states require school attendance for a specified length of time before employment.

Fifteen states prohibit outright the employment of children who cannot read and write English.

Connecticut and Illinois do not specify in what language children must be able to read and write. Michigan requires English only if children have been in the state over 3 years.

These are the exemptions of orphans, children of disabled fathers or widowed mothers, and the special exemption of the canning industry in several states. There remain to be noted the officials authorized to grant exemptions, in so far as they are specified in the laws, and the reasons for granting.

Exemptions for work over time are allowed for various reasons in thirteen different states.

A.—WORK IS ALLOWED OVER TIME

I.—On Saturdays or for Certain Days Preceding Christmas in Colorado, where children under 16 may work more than 8 hours in the day, in the week before and following Christmas Day.

New York, where persons of 16 years and upward may work in mercantile establishments more than 10 hours a day on Saturdays, provided that the total number of hours of labor in a week of any such person does not exceed 60; such persons may also work more than 10 hours a day between the 15th day of December and the following first day of January.

Minnesota, where children not less than 14 years of age may be employed in mercantile establishments on Saturdays and for 10 days each year before Christmas until 10 in the evening; provided that this permission is not so construed as to permit such children to work more than 10 hours in any one day or over 60 hours in any one week.

Pennsylvania, where minors under 16 years may work in retail mercantile establishments after 9 P. M. and longer than 60 hours a week, and 12 hours in one day on Saturday of each week, and during a period of 20 days, beginning with December 5, and ending with December 24; Provided that within the said 20 days, the working hours shall not exceed 10 hours per day, or 60 hours per week.

Rhode Island, where minors under 16 years may work after 8 P. M. on Saturdays, and 4 days before Christmas.

II.—For the purpose of making up lost time due to some accident or breakdown in the machinery in

New Hampshire, where women and children under 18 may be employed for this purpose more than 10 hours in a day.

South Carolina, where children under 12 (whose labor is permissible only if they are allowed to work because they are children of widows or of disabled fathers or are orphans) may be employed for this purpose after 8 P. M., provided that under no circumstances a child below 12 years of age shall work later than 9 P. M.

III.—When a different apportionment of the hours of labor is made for the sole purpose of making a shorter day's work for one day in the week in

New York, where women and boys between 16 and 18 years, may work in factories more than 10 hours in one day in order to make a shorter workday on the last day of the week; and women between 16 and 21 may work more than 10 hours in any one day in mercantile establishments for the same purpose, provided that they do not work more than 60 hours in any one week.

Indiana, where for the same purpose boys under 16 and girls under 18 may work more than 60 hours in one week or 10 hours in one day; but not more hours in any one week than would make an average of 10 hours per day for the whole number of days which such persons so work during such week.

Pennsylvania, where male minors over 14 years, who have not been employed between 6 A. M. and 9. P. M., may be employed for not more than 9 consecutive hours in any one day after 9 P. M., and provided further that in establishments where night work is hereby permitted, and where the nature of the employment requires two or more working shifts in the 24 hours, males over 14 years may be employed partly by day and partly by night, not more than nine consecutive hours.

B.—Work Is Allowed Under Age: Authorities Who Grant Exemptions

SCHEDULE H—ENFORCEMENT

1.—THE CHILD LABOR LAWS

The states provide in various ways for the enforcement of the child labor laws.

Seven states have made no provision for enforcement, but violation of the law may be prosecuted by the County Attorney, if complaint is made to him by any interested person. Some of the states have entirely given over to the school authorities the enforcement of child labor laws, and in many others the truant officers as well as the factory inspectors are authorized to enter places of employment, to demand certificates of age or schooling, to make arrests and to enter prosecutions for violation through the Prosecuting Attorney.

In nine states, Delaware, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon and Wisconsin, the factory inspectors may demand a certificate of physical fitness from some regular or county physician in the case of young persons who may seem physically unable to perform the labor at which they may be employed, and shall have the power to prohibit the employment of any minor that cannot obtain such a certificate. In New York and Ohio, the physical fitness of a child apparently 14 years old is determined by a medical officer of the board or department of health.

The names and addresses of state labor officials charged with the enforcement of child labor laws are included, for the first time, in the schedule on Enforcement.

Any person in any state, where state labor officials are appointed to enforce these laws, may turn to this list to discover precisely upon whom the responsibility for enforcement or non-enforcement rests.

The list of names has been obtained by correspondence with the heads of the labor departments of the various states. In some instances it is possible that additional appointments may have been made since these lists were received (November, 1905). No attempt is made to give the names and addresses of truant officers or school authorities who enforce the law in some states, owing to the obvious difficulty of obtaining accurate lists.

b. PROSECUTIONS

The number of prosecutions by the labor officials during the past year in each state, and amounts recovered in fines, are also incorporated in the schedules for the first time. The degree to which prosecution is used as a means of enforcement varies greatly in the different states.

Some officials have few prosecutions to report, on account of the recent date of their child labor laws; others have been in office too short a time to inaugurate a vigorous policy.

The honorable record of Illinois is appended to show the most effective prosecution since 1895.

No attempt is made to give the number of prosecutions in states where child labor laws are enforced by school authorities only.

California—2 prosecutions, several cases pending; recent law.

WHAT CONSTITUTES EFFECTIVE CHILD-LABOR LAWS

Effective legislation dealing with child-labor involves many differing elements including the child, the parent, the employer, the officials charged with the duty of enforcing the statutes, and finally the community which enacts laws, provides schools for the children when they are prohibited from working, supports and authorizes officers for the enforcement of the laws, prescribes penalties for their violation, assists dependent families in which the children are below the legal age for work. In the long run, the effectiveness of the law depends upon the conscience of the community as a whole far more than upon the parent and the employer acting together.

With the foregoing reservations and qualifications duly emphasized, the following summaries are believed to outline the substance of the effective legislation which it seems reasonable to try to secure in the present and the immediate future. They deal only with provisions for the child as a child, taking for granted the provisions for fire-escapes, safeguards for machines, toilet facilities and all those things which the child shares with the adult worker.

An effective child-labor law rests primarily upon certain definite prohibitions among which are the following:

Labor Is Prohibited

(1) for all children under the age of fourteen years,
(2) for all children under sixteen years of age who do not measure sixty inches and weigh eighty pounds,*
(3) for all children under sixteen years of age who cannot read fluently and write legibly simple sentences in the English language,
(4) for all children under the age of sixteen years, between the hours of 7 p. m. and 7 a. m., or longer than eight hours in any twenty-four hours, or longer than forty-eight hours in any week.
(5) for all children under the age of sixteen years in occupations dangerous to life, limb, health or morals.

The Child

Effective legislation requires that before going to work the child satisfy a competent officer appointed for the purpose, that it

(1) is fourteen years of age, and
(2) is in good health, and
(3) measures at least sixty inches and weighs eighty pounds, and
(4) is able to read fluently and write legibly simple sentences in the English language, and
(5) has attended school a full school year during the twelve months next preceding going to work.

The Parent

Effective child-labor legislation requires that the parent

(1) keep the child in school to the age of fourteen years and longer if the child has not completed its required school work, and
(2) take oath as to the exact age of the child before letting it begin to work, and
(3) substantiate the oath by producing a transcript of the official record of the birth of the child, or the record of its baptism, or some other religious record of the time of the birth of the child, and must
(4) produce the record of the child's school attendance, signed by the principal of the school which the child last attended.

*This measure is not now specified in any statute though it is implied in the statute of New York, enacted in 1903. Bills specifically embracing this provision were introduced into the legislatures of Iowa and Louisiana in 1904.

The Employer

Effective child-labor legislation requires that the employer before letting the child begin to work,

(1) obtain and place on file ready for official inspection papers showing (a) the place and date of birth of the child substantiated by (b) the oath of the parent corroborated by
  (c) a transcript of the official register of births, or by a transcript of the record of baptism, or other religious record of the birth of the child, and by
  (d) the school record signed by the principal of the school which the child last attended, and by (e) the statement of the officer of the Board of Education designated for the purpose, that he has approved the papers and examined the child.
(2) After permitting the child to begin to work, the employer is required to produce the foregoing papers on demand of the school-attendance office, the health officer and the factory inspectors.
(3) In case the child cease to work, the employer must restore to the child the papers enumerated above.
(4) During the time that the child is at work, the employer must provide suitable seats, and permit their use so far as the nature of the work allows; and must
(5) post and keep posted in a conspicuous place, the hours for beginning work in the morning, and for stopping work in the middle of the day; the hours for resuming work and for stopping at the close of the day; and all work done at any time not specified in such posted notice constitutes a violation of the law. The total number of hours must not exceed eight in any one day or forty-eight in one week

The Officials

Effective legislation for the protection of children requires that the officials entrusted with the duty of enforcing it

(1) give their whole time, not less than eight hours of every working day, to the performance of their duties, making night inspections whenever this may be necessary to insure that children are not working during the prohibited hours; and
(2) treat all employers alike, irrespective of political considerations, of race, religion or power in a community;
(3) prosecute all violations of the law;
(4) keep records complete and intelligible enough to facilitate the enactment of legislation suitable to the changing conditions of industry.

The School

The best child-labor law is a compulsory education law covering forty weeks of the year and requiring the consecutive attendance of all the children to the age of fourteen years, and until they complete a specified portion of the curriculum, as eight years in Colorado or five years in New York. It is never certain that children are not at work, if they are out of school. In order to keep the children, however, it is not enough to compel attendance—the schools must be modified and adapted to the needs of the recent immigrants in the North and of the poor whites in the South, affording instruction which appeals to the parents as worth having, in lieu of the wages which the children are forbidden to earn, and appeals to the children as interesting and attractive. These requirements are so insufficiently met in the great manufacturing centres of the North that truancy is in several of them, at present, an insoluble problem. No system of child-labor legislation can be regarded as effective which does not face and deal with these facts.

The evolution of the vacation school and camp promises strong reinforcement of the child-labor laws; which are now seriously weakened by the fact that the long vacation leaves idle upon the streets children whom employers covet by reason of the low price of their labor, while parents, greedy for the children's earnings and anxious lest the children suffer from the life of the streets, eagerly seek work for them. Nothing could be worse for the physique of the school child than being compelled to work during the summer; and the development of the vacation school and vacation camp alone seems to promise a satisfactory solution of the problem of the vacation of the city child of the working class.

The Community

Effective child-labor legislation imposes upon the community many duties, among which are

(1) maintaining officials—men and women—school-attendance officers, health officers, and factory inspectors, all of whom need
  (a) salary and traveling expenses,
  (b) access at all reasonable times to the places where children are employed,
  (c) power to prosecute all violations of the statutes affecting working children,
  (d) tenure of office so effectively assured that they need not fear removal from office in consequence of prosecuting powerful offenders;
(2) maintaining schools in which to educate the children who are prohibited from working;
(3) maintaining vital statistics, especially birth records, such that the real age of native children may be readily ascertained;
(4) maintaining provision for the adequate relief of dependent families in which the children are not yet of legal age for beginning work.

More important, however, than the enactment of the foregoing provisions is the maintenance in the community of a persistent, lively interest in the enforcement of the child-labor statutes. Without such interest, judges do not enforce penalties against offending parents and employers; inspectors become discouraged and demoralized; or faithful officers are removed because they have no organized backing, while some group of powerful industries clamors that the law is injuring its interest. Well-meaning employers grow careless, infractions become the rule, and workingmen form the habit of thinking that laws inimical to their interest are enforced, while those framed in their interest are broken with impunity.

Upon parents there presses incessant poverty, urging them to seek opportunities for wage-earning, even for the youngest children; and upon the employers presses incessant competition, urging them to reduce the pay-roll by all means, fair and foul. No law enforces itself; and no officials can enforce a law which depends upon them alone. It is only when they are consciously the agents of the will of the people that they can make the law really protect the children effectively.

A STANDARD CHILD LABOR LAW

The best provisions of the law of Massachusetts, New York and Illinois have been included in the Standard Child Labor Law which follows:

Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

Compiled from New York Factory and Mercantile Establishments Laws of 1903.

Sec. 1. No child under fourteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, store, business office, telegraph office, restaurant, hotel, apartment house or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to employ any child under fourteen years of age in any business or service whatever, during any part of the term during which the public schools of the district in which the child resides are in session. Child Under 14 Years.

New York Compulsory Education Law of 1903. Sec. 5.

Compiled from Massachusetts law and New York Factory Law of 1903.

Sec. 2. No child between fourteen and sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in any factory, workshop or mercantile establishment unless the person or corporation employing him procures and keeps on file and accessible to the truant officers of the town or city, and to the inspectors of factories, an employment certificate as hereinafter prescribed, and keeps two complete lists of all such children employed therein, one on file and one conspicuously posted near the principal entrance of the building in which such children are employed. On termination of the employment of a child so registered, and whose certificate is so filed, such certificate shall be forthwith surrendered by the employer to the child or its parent or guardian or custodian. The inspector of factories may make demand on an employer in whose factory a child apparently under the age of sixteen years is employed or permitted or suffered to work, and whose employment certificate is not then filed as required by this article, that such employer shall either furnish him within ten days, evidence satisfactory to him that such child is in fact over sixteen years of age, or shall cease to employ or permit or suffer such child to work in such factory. The inspector of factories may require from such employer the same evidence of age of such child as is required on the issuance of an employment certificate; and the employer furnishing such evidence shall not be required to furnish any further evidence of the age of the child. In case such employer shall fail to produce and deliver to the inspector of factories within ten days after such demand such evidence of age herein required by him, and shall thereafter continue to employ such child or permit or suffer such child to work in such factory, proof of the giving of such notice and of such failure to produce and file such evidence shall be prima facie evidence in any prosecution brought for a violation of this article that such child is under sixteen years of age and is unlawfully employed. Child Under 16 Years. Child Apparently Under 16 Years

New York Factory Law of 1905.

Massachusetts Law.

Sec. 3. An employment certificate shall be approved only by the superintendent of schools or by a person authorized by him in writing, or, where there is no superintendent of schools, by a person authorized by the school committee: provided that no member of a school committee or other person authorized as aforesaid shall have authority to approve such certificate for any child then in or about to enter his own employment, or the employment of a firm or corporation of which he is a member, officer or employee. Employment Certificate by Whom Approved.

Compiled from New York Factory Law of 1903 Ch. 184 and Oregon Factory Law of 1904.

Sec. 4. The person authorized to issue employment certificate shall not issue such certificate until he has received, examined, approved, and filed the following papers duly executed: (1) The school record of such child properly filled out and signed as provided in this article. (2) A passport or duly attested transcript of the certificate of birth or baptism or other religious record, showing the date and place of birth of such child. A duly attested transcript of the birth certificate filed according to law with a registrar of vital statisics, or other officer charged with the duty of recording births, shall be conclusive evidence of the age of such child. NEWSBOY LAW

So few statutes exist in the United States concerning the labor of children on the streets that the Newsboy Law of New York is printed in full, with a brief statement of the provisions in which it is excelled by the Boston law.

The method of enforcing the New York law is found to be radically defective. The statute requires the police to arrest offending newsboys, and provides for trial before a court empowered to commit to reformatory institutions. Two years' experience proves that neither the uniformed nor the plain clothes police are willing or able to enforce this law. As the act of selling on the streets should properly be a privilege granted out of school hours to school boys in good standing, the enforcement of the law should necessarily be entrusted to the school authorities.

LAWS OF NEW YORK

AN ACT to amend the labor law relating to children working in streets and public places in cities of the first class.

Became a law, April 8, 1903, with the approval of the Governor. Amended 1905.

§ 174. Prohibited employment of children in street trades.—No male child under ten, and no girl under sixteen years of age shall in any city of the first or second class sell or expose or offer for sale newspapers in any street or public place.

§ 175. Permit and badge for newsboys, how issued.—No male child actually or apparently under fourteen years of age shall sell or expose or offer for sale said articles unless a permit or badge as hereinafter provided shall have been issued to him by the district superintendent of the board of education of the city and school district where said child resides, or by such other officer thereof as may be officially designated by such board for that purpose, on the application of the parent, guardian or other person having the custody of the child desiring such permit and badge, or in case said child has no parent, guardian or custodian, then on the application of his next friend, being an adult. Such permit and badge shall not be issued until the officer issuing the same shall have received, examined, approved and placed on file, in his office, satisfactory proof that such male child is of the age of ten years or upwards. No permit or badge provided for herein shall be valid for any purpose except during the period in which such proof shall remain on file, nor shall such permit or badge be authority beyond the period fixed therein for its duration. After having received, examined, approved and placed on file such proof, the officer shall issue to the child a permit and badge.

§ 176. Contents of permit and badge.—Such permit shall state the date and place of birth of the child, the name and address of its parent, guardian, custodian or next friend, as the case may be, and describe the color of hair and eyes, the height and weight, and any distinguishing facial mark of such child, and shall further state that the proof required by the preceding section has been duly examined, approved and filed; and that the child named in such permit has appeared before the officer issuing the permit. The badge furnished by the officer issuing the permit shall bear on its face a number corresponding to the number of the permit, and the name of the child. Every such permit, and every such badge, on its reverse side, shall be signed in the presence of the officer issuing the same by the child in whose name it is issued.

§ 177. Regulations concerning badge and permit.—The badge provided for herein shall be worn conspicuously at all times by such child while so working; and such permit and badge shall expire at the end of one year from the date of their issue. No child to whom such permit and badge are issued, shall transfer the same to any other person nor be engaged in any city of the first or second class as a newsboy, or shall sell or expose or offer for sale newspapers in any street or public place without having upon his person such badge, and he shall exhibit the same upon demand at any time to any police, or attendance officer.

§ 178. Badge and permit to be surrendered.—The parent, guardian, custodian or next friend, as the case may be, of every child to whom such permit and badge shall be issued, shall surrender the same to the authority by which said permit and badge are issued, at the expiration of the period provided therefor.

§ 179. Limit of hours.—No child to whom a permit and badge are issued as provided for in the preceding sections, shall sell or expose or offer for sale, any newspapers after ten o'clock in the evening.

§ 179a. Violation of this article, how punished.—Any child who shall work in any city of the first class in any street or public place as a newsboy or shall sell or expose or offer for sale newspapers under circumstances forbidden by the provisions of this article, must be arrested and brought before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction to commit a child to an incorporated charitable reformatory or other institution, and be dealt with according to law; and if any such child is committed to an institution, it shall, when practicable, be committed to an institution governed by persons of the same religious faith as the parents of such child

§ 2. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to repeal amend, modify, impair or in any manner affect any provision of the penal code or the code of criminal procedure.

ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS IN FORCE IN BOSTON

The following provisions of the Boston law excel the New York law and should be incorporated in any statute hereafter adopted.

No child shall work as a bootblack unless he is over ten years of age; and he shall not sell any other article except newspapers, unless he is over twelve years of age.

Every permit shall be issued on the condition that the holder thereof shall, so long as he continues under the age of fourteen years, attend, during every session thereof, one of the public schools, or some regularly established school in the city of Boston, approved by the committee on licenses of said city.

Any minor who violates any of said terms will be deprived of his permit and badge, and be fined.

PROPOSED CHILDREN'S BUREAU AT WASHINGTON.

The bill to be introduced in Congress at this session providing for a Children's Bureau as a part of the Federal Government, will ask for the establishment of a bureau to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and especially to investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, physical degeneracy, orphanage, juvenile delinquency and juvenile courts, desertion and illegitimacy, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children of the working classes, employment, legislation affecting children in the several states and territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the health, efficiency, character and training of children.

In order that the necessary interest in this important measure may be aroused and congressional action secured, all persons concerned for the welfare of children should write at once to their respective Congressmen and Senators urging the passage of a bill, embodying this plan.

A BILL TO REGULATE THE EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

UNITED STATES CENSUS, 1900

(Population, Vol. II, Part II, Table 65—p. 422.)

The following tables exhibit the actual numbers, not percentages of illiterate children between the ages of ten and fourteen years found in each state in 1900. In the table as published (Twelfth Census, Population, Vol. II, Part II, Table 65) the states are arranged alphabetically, and this is here reproduced.

For purposes of readier comparison the writer has compiled an additional table identical with that except that, instead of the alphabetical arrangement, the states are placed in the order of the literacy of the children, those states being grouped at the bottom of the scale which have the largest number of illiterate children, and those at the top which have the least number of illiterate children of the age under consideration. For greater convenience, the table is divided by horizontal lines into four groups of thirteen states each.
